Dear Friends:

Last year, Lutheran Social Services of Illinois (LSSI) cared for nearly 73,000 people throughout the state. That number is more significant when you consider it represents 73,000 individual lives touched—and changed—by our services. One life changed has a ripple effect, as that individual creates stronger relationships with countless others. Such impact illustrates how LSSI lives out our mission to bring healing, justice, and wholeness to people and communities—one life at a time. The notion of changing lives is summarized most profoundly by one of our returning citizens, a woman incarcerated for over two years, who says, “LSSI helped me regain my life. LSSI has been there for me.”

It is wonderful to see lives changed as LSSI fulfills its mission, yet the sense of urgency we feel in our work is always close at hand. More than 80 percent of our clients report an annual household income under $15,000, compared to just 12 percent of all Illinois households. Nearly half of our clients have an annual household income under $5,000. The critical services we provide assist our state’s most vulnerable residents.

As we help our clients make changes in their lives, we also understand the necessity to make changes within our organization. The opening of Gable Point Senior Housing in Crystal Lake and the establishment of Re-entry Services for returning citizens in Rockford are but two examples.

In fiscal year 2014, we also made the decision to sell our two remaining nursing homes: St. Matthew Center for Health, Park Ridge, and P.A. Peterson Center for Health, Rockford. This decision was the culmination of thoughtful discussion and planning on how to best adapt our services to the rapidly changing landscape of healthcare. We concluded that LSSI, as a social service provider that operates only two nursing homes, was not the most suitable owner to provide the capital investment, technology, and expertise needed for them to continue providing high quality services in the future. We found two organizations that have those demonstrated abilities, and ownership of the homes was transferred in July 2014. The proceeds from the sale improve LSSI’s sustainability and enable us to continue providing services to benefit people in need.

Changing a life is no easy task, and we remain grateful for the thousands of individuals and organizations whose generosity of time and resources make them critical partners in LSSI’s mission. Your investment in our programs and the people we serve is having a profound impact on lives throughout Illinois.

With Gratitude,

David M.A. Jensen
President and Chief Operating Officer
Lutheran Social Services of Illinois

And let us not grow weary of doing good, for in due season, we will reap if we do not give up.

GALATIANS 6:9
Dear Friends:

Annual reports are typically a time for organizations to showcase their good works. LSSI’s staff—and clients—truly let their light shine in 2014, embodying our mission of bringing healing, justice, and wholeness to people and communities.

The past year, chronicled within this report, has set the stage for my start at LSSI as Chief Executive Officer. As you read about our clients and how their lives were changed by the services offered through Lutheran Social Services of Illinois, you’ll see why I was drawn to the organization and social ministry.

The work of LSSI has been a part of my vocation for many years—behavioral health, seniors, child welfare, and persons with disabilities. LSSI’s programs go beyond service to others—our staff builds a strong trust with clients, who in turn invite them into their lives. That’s an amazing privilege to happen on a daily basis. This reflects the tradition of Lutheran fellowship—loving the neighbor and welcoming the stranger.

As I begin my work with LSSI, I am reminded that this is an extraordinary time for human services. I can’t think of a time where there has been such significant national momentum in terms of healthcare reform, child welfare reform, and the focus on a person’s wholeness and sense of community. This is what we at LSSI are about: helping others realize their hopes and dreams, to integrate with community, to maintain independence, and have the opportunity to make personal contributions.

As evidenced by this last year, LSSI continues to have a significant impact on the lives of those we serve. Our work is of great importance because it is an expression of the love of Christ. When I think of it this way, it raises an already high bar even higher. At this time next year, I hope to reflect on a growing personal experience with the many individuals who make it possible for LSSI to live out its mission and report on the work we’ve accomplished together.

In Faith,

Mark A. Stutrud
Chief Executive Officer
Lutheran Social Services of Illinois

Let your light shine before others, so that they may see your good works and give glory to your Father who is in heaven.

MATTHEW 5:16
When Mary Drew, 59, ended up in a hospital emergency room after suffering a stress-induced panic attack, she could not predict the major life events that awaited her—or the emotional and physical toll they would have on her life. The support she found at LSSI’s West Suburban Counseling program empowered her, helping her to cope with a barrage of stressful events, including her husband’s serious illness and eventual death.

“I had a full-blown panic attack. I was a nurse, and I didn’t see it coming,” Drew recalls of that fateful day 12 years ago. “I was trying to do too much for too many people. I was stretched in every different direction.”

Her doctor recommended that she seek counseling to help manage the stress in her life. Drew’s mother told her about West Suburban Counseling. Based in suburban Chicago, the program is part of LSSI’s Behavioral Health Services. “We offer a comfortable environment, with our services located in a home in the neighborhood,” says Program Director Jaclyn Hovde. Since 1976, the program has offered counseling, crisis intervention, and life education services to help individuals and families, including children, deal with conflicts, teach effective communication skills and coping mechanisms, and improve their overall well-being.

Over the next 12 years, Drew’s ability to cope and manage stress would be tested as the primary caregiver for her husband, who died after battling diabetes. Three weeks prior to his death, her sister died. Her mother was diagnosed with dementia; her step-father with Alzheimer’s disease. She also was caring for an adult son with autism. During that time, Drew, as well as her husband and mother, benefited from the clinical counseling services offered at West Suburban Counseling. The support to her—and her family as a whole—was reassuring.

“All through these crises, I would be seeing Jane, and she would be bucking me up,” says Drew. “I think I adjusted quite well, and it’s all because of the therapy at West Suburban Counseling.” The woman that Drew refers to is Jane Wine, a licensed clinical social worker who met with her regularly.

“I see my role being to jog a person into getting a new perspective on their situation,” Wine says about working with clients. “When people are down and out, it’s hard to see the good things in their lives. I help empower them so that they can make changes in their lives.”

Not only did Wine assist Drew at some of the lowest moments of her life, her encouragement helped her develop coping mechanisms she uses on a daily basis. “West Suburban Counseling helped me become the strong, resilient person I had been all along,” Drew said. “I was empowered to take charge over the demons of change, stress, and problems that I was facing with a renewed strength.”

Such empowerment helped Drew transition from her full-time career as a nurse into retirement, selling her home, and moving. Counseling sessions with Wine encouraged her to be social again and rediscover past hobbies that bring her joy.

“If Lutheran Social Services of Illinois had not been there for me, who knows where I would be today,” Drew reflects. “I do not exaggerate when I say that they saved my life. I am now a retired person with another whole new world to explore and face new experiences.”
Osayande and Nanyamko Watson had a unique perspective on foster care when they decided to become foster parents in the early 90s. As employees of the Cook County Correctional Facility, the Watsons saw first-hand the struggles of adolescent African-American males.

Osayande, who worked at the correctional facility for 30 years before his retirement, saw a void in the mentorship of young people.

“The young people I saw come in didn’t seem to have a lot of guidance,” he says. “I tried to be that somebody to help them with their problems. It came very easy.”

Growing up in foster care, Nanyamko lived in four homes before she was 18. Her final home was “fantastic,” enabling her to transition successfully into adulthood. So when health issues meant she could no longer work full-time, Nanyamko turned her attention to helping children like herself.

Many children have come through the welcoming doors of the Watsons’ home over the past 24 years. Three have stayed permanently. Jawanza was their first adopted son, now grown and living in Colorado. Then came Jahlini and five years later Jahari. They are currently in the process of permanently adopting two more boys.

“We know that African-American boys with special needs are the hardest to place, and their adoption rate is almost zero,” Osayande says.

The Watsons thrive working with African-American boys with special needs, believing they have the tools to set them up for success.

“I think I have a great nurturing ability,” Osayande says. “Everyone seems to come to me when a crisis is on. I’m very structured, sometimes probably to a fault. They can pretty much know how I’m going to do things.”

Nanyamko admits she is the stricter, more disciplined side of the pair. She rose to the rank of captain in only 10 years at the Cook County Correctional Facility. She has her empathetic side, however, having lived through the same experiences her children do, moving in and out of foster homes.

“I think in that respect they can relate to me and know they’re not alone in what they can experience,” she says. “They’ll talk with me about it because they know that I know.”

It takes a unique couple to face the challenges of fostering and parenting children with special needs. “I haven’t had anyone like them,” says Gail Jackson, the licensing representative responsible for the Watsons at LSSI’s Augustana office. “They are such good foster parents because they mirror each other. I think that is why it is so easy for them to work with children who have special needs. They don’t look at it that way—they just see that the child needs a home.”

A home is what they have provided. Along with their soon-to-be five adopted boys, they have four birth children as well. Add in their nine grandchildren and the many, many children who have spent an extended period of time within their walls, and they have parented, mentored, and loved almost 30 children.

“For all of those people who say ‘How do you do it? I could never do it.’ I just say, ‘How do you not?!”’ Nanyamko says. “I forget I didn’t give birth to these kids because I love them exactly the same. I can’t really tell the difference.”
Serving as a pastor in the Baptist Church for more than 30 years, Rev. Sylvester Bonds has travelled to Asia, Africa, and throughout the United States. In recent years, diabetes halted his travels and has made many daily living tasks challenging, but LSSI’s Intouch Home Care Services have helped Rev. Bonds retain much of his independence, enabling him to sustain his pastoral relationships, and continue his passion for spreading the word of God.

Now 73, Rev. Bonds was educated at Cornell University and served in the military during the Vietnam War, where he fought in the defense of Quang Tri. He always felt the calling of a higher power, but took his time trying to find out what exactly it was.

“I’ve been a Lutheran, a Methodist, even a black Muslim,” Rev. Bonds says. “But what I found was that it always comes back to Jesus.”

Rev. Bonds studied at two schools of preaching before serving congregations throughout the south. He still keeps in touch, mentoring pastors daily.

After diabetes began taking away the use of his legs, Rev. Bonds realized that he couldn’t continue to fulfill the responsibilities his congregation needed. But he continues to preach to anyone who will listen.

“What I just really love to do is preach,” he says. “I would preach every day if I could.”

Rev. Bonds and his wife, Leola, moved to her family’s home on Chicago’s south side when he retired. It was here they first heard about LSSI’s Intouch services and how they would allow them to get the assistance they needed while staying independent in their own home. After speaking with program director Sadie Shines and supervisor Linda Ross, the couple was sold.

“I can’t speak highly enough of Miss Ross,” Rev. Bonds says. “She’s always so professional and knows just how she can help. She takes care of everything and I really appreciate that.”

Rev. Bonds has high expectations of services and people, and LSSI’s Intouch program meets his exacting standards. He treats the caregivers as one of the family, and appreciates not only their professionalism, but the interest they take in his life as well.

Intouch caregiver Alfredia Carpenter, a certified nursing assistant, does everything from helping Rev. Bonds change clothes, position him in his wheelchair, and some cooking and cleaning. Carpenter’s dedication is evident. She’s made a commitment to Rev. Bonds’ well-being—mentally, physically, and in this case—spiritually.

At Rev. Bonds’ request, Carpenter will read the Bible with him, as well as a prayer book, every day. Aside from her skills with assisting him, Rev. Bonds said he was impressed with her biblical knowledge.

“She has pointed out some things that I’ve never come to, and I’m almost never wrong about the Bible,” he says.

Carpenter has worked in other areas of health care, but loves the one-on-one connection that she’s been able to have with her clients through Intouch. That connection is certainly shared with Rev. Bonds, who appreciates what she is able to do for him.

Intouch Home Care allowed more than 2,000 seniors to remain in their homes.
When his wife of more than 60 years passed away, Mel Sparlin, 86, faced the reality of moving. Making such a big change in lifestyle can be lonely and difficult, but Sparlin was able to fit in right away in his new home at the Luther Center, an LSSI-owned affordable senior housing complex in Rockford.

“I have enjoyed the fellowship and friendship,” Sparlin says. “I appreciate the strong effort to make a family atmosphere. There is a lot of encouragement for the seniors to make a contribution.”

Sparlin contributes to the family atmosphere cultivated by residents and staff around the halls of Luther Center.

“Mel’s a wonderful man,” says Lisa Gable, a service coordinator at Luther Center. “He’s a really great, soft-spoken, polite man who everyone loves to have around.”

For Sparlin, Luther Center changed his life—by keeping it consistent.

After Sparlin broke his hip recently, he decided he needed to move from his current home in Luther Center’s apartment-style unit to a more care-driven assisted living arrangement. At other housing sites this would mean Sparlin would have to start over—moving to a new building, adapting to a new community, and adjusting to new surroundings.

Luther Center offers a unique setting with both apartment-style and assisted living units at one location. Sparlin was able to stay in the same building, with the same people, activities, and staff he loves, while receiving the higher level of care that he needed.

“I greatly appreciate that assisted living staff keep me on track with my medications, do my laundry, and check in on me so I feel safe and secure,” Sparlin says.

Staff is equipped to help the residents at Luther Center with whatever they need. Some people need help getting access to supplemental Social Security income, Medicare or other services to help them live comfortably. Gable does an annual assessment with each resident to determine any changes in their situation and then guides them to the appropriate resources.

“The nice thing about our assisted living is that they still intermingle with the other residents,” Gable says. “They still get to see their friends. They are encouraged to participate just as they would if they were still in apartment-style living.”

“Staff see the residents more often than we see our own family, five or six times a day. They have a level of trust with us that is fostered by our level of contact,” says Rick Jones, who helps the residents with maintenance needs.

As Jones spoke, a resident knocked on the office window and waved, just another example of the “Open Door Policy” at Luther Center.

Sparlin said that many of the intangibles of Luther Center aren’t understood until they are experienced first-hand.

“I was pleased with what I saw during the tour of Luther Center, but even more pleased after I moved in,” he says.
SSI served as a lifeline for Melissa Allen during the nearly three years that she was incarcerated. Through the Connections program and its Visits to Mom, Allen was able to see her three young children on a regular basis. Those visits gave her hope and made her think of a meaningful life beyond prison.

Once she was released in 2012 and became a returning citizen, Allen, 44, again turned to Connections, part of LSSI’s Prisoner and Family Ministry. Connections offers comprehensive services to women, as well as their families, while they are incarcerated and upon their release, in order to rebuild their lives.

Women who are released from prison have basic, immediate needs that must be met before they can move on to bigger and better milestones, says Olivia Chase, Connections Family Service Specialist. An immediate need is to secure housing and what Chase refers to as personal infrastructure—a state photo i.d., a social security card, a birth certificate. These are documents most people take for granted, but which are critical for functioning in society, Chase says.

“There are so many things you need to do when you’re released from prison,” Allen says. “Don’t give up. Take one thing at a time.”

Once Connections clients gain their footing with the basics, “then we look at what they’re going to need to sustain stability,” Chase says. Allen worked with Connections staff to create a plan and took steps to achieve her goals. In the process, Connections staff became like family.

Asked what role LSSI’s Connections program has played in her life, Allen answers, “Well, that’s a lot.” She pauses in thought before listing the many ways the program has supported her as she builds her new life. While incarcerated, LSSI provided Christmas gifts for her children at the holidays. She needed help to overcome drug addiction, and LSSI referred her to a treatment program upon her release. One son received tutoring, and Allen obtained her high school diploma. She completed job training, has her own apartment, and a full-time job. She has worked to regain permanent custody of her children.

“Melissa is making amazing strides,” Chase says. “She innately knows she has a lot to prove—to herself and others. She sets her mind to something, and she gets it done. And, she always expresses her gratitude for our partnership in her successful reentry.”

Recounting all she has accomplished in the two years since being released from prison, Allen shakes her head and grins. It wasn’t easy, she admits, but she’s reaping the rewards of LSSI’s services and her own commitment.

“What surprised me is myself. I like living. I didn’t experience that before. It’s new to me, and I’m enjoying it,” she says. “After getting out of prison, I used to really have a lot of fears, not knowing what to do. And now, it’s amazing, each and every day. I know I can do this. I can be a productive citizen. People can change with help like Connections. It matters.”

315 incarcerated mothers, caregivers, and children were able to stay connected through Visits to Mom.
The financial information provided is a summary of the full consolidated financial statements for the years ended June 30, 2014 and June 30, 2013, which is available on LSSI.org.

The financial statements also reflect both a restatement of 2013 information resulting from a change in accounting for refundable entrance fees and the aggregation of Peterson Meadows’ and the nursing homes’ information as “Discontinued Operations.”

The year ended June 30, 2014, was an important one for Lutheran Social Services of Illinois (LSSI) as we took on the task of significantly improving our financial stability and sustainability. During the year, LSSI entered into an agreement to transfer its Rockford Continuing Care Retirement Community (CCRC), Peterson Meadows, to Wesley Willows, another faith-based Rockford CCRC. LSSI also reached an agreement to sell our two nursing homes, St. Matthew Center for Health and P. A. Peterson Center for Health, to two high quality operators, Legacy Healthcare and Villa Healthcare. The transaction closed in late July 2014, and, other than aggregating the nursing operations with Peterson Meadows as “Discontinued Operations,” is not reflected in the financial summary.

As a result of the Peterson Meadows transaction, the $5.3 million Peterson Meadows bonds outstanding were retired, and Wesley Willows assumed responsibility for the $11 million refundable entrance fee obligations.

The sale of the nursing homes, completed shortly after the end of Fiscal Year 2014, allowed LSSI to retire $15.8 million of outstanding bonds with a portion of the proceeds. The agency received approximately $20 million in proceeds, net of transaction costs, for the two properties and wrote off approximately $9 million of the net book value of the properties. The gain will be reflected in Fiscal 2015.

LSSI has benefited from investment returns and actuarial gains associated with its pension plan in both of the past two years. Fiscal Years 2014 and 2013 added an excess of $3 million and $4 million to net assets, respectively. As of June 30, 2014, the assets of the plan stood at $37.1 million, compared with an accumulated benefit obligation of $45.4 million. The unfunded liability of $8.3 million, or 18 percent, is the lowest it has been since June 30, 2007.

While LSSI was able to increase its net assets by $8.2 million and $2.7 million in 2014 and 2013, respectively, the agency continues to operate in a difficult financial environment, reflective of the state of the economy in Illinois. But due to the dedication of our wonderful colleagues and the generosity of our faithful donors, LSSI is looking to the future with confidence and a greatly improved financial picture, allowing us to provide loving care to thousands of people and communities each year. For that I am deeply grateful.
